Biography

David Riggall, was born a “yellow belly” (the nickname derived from the yellow tunics of the Yeomanry) in the county of Lincolnshire, where he worked in banking, before moving to London in 1968 to become a programmer with Lloyds TSB plc. After 5 years in programming, David became a systems consultant with Great Universal Stores, before joining IBM. In 1984, he was appointed as a director of a Yorkshire software house and also founded his own personal computer dealership called Yorkside Personal Computers. Serving national as well as local firms in Yorkshire & Humberside, it was then that his trading logo first became, as it remains, a Rose over a Bridge ☺
